Hops

Warm Hops Tea To make a proper cup of hops tea, simply steep one bag (or a teaspoon of loose leaf) organic hops 10 minutes in a cup of purified water. You can enjoy your tea warm or cold, optionally adding your favorite sweeteners to taste.

Hops Extract To make hops extract simply use one heaping cup organic hops in a pint sized mason jar. Cover the hops with any strong grain alcohol or Vodka. Layer plastic wrap between lid and jar to prevent the lid from rusting. Label and date the jar (ex. Hops 6/17/15). Store overnight in a dark, cool place. The hops will absorb the alcohol, so for one week you'll need to top it off daily with more alcohol and give it a good shake to keep the herbs covered. After that, make it a point to shake the jar weekly for 4-6 weeks. Strain (See How to Strain Loose Leaf Tea below) through a damp paper towel and fine mesh strainer. Store in dark, cool place, preferably into amber bottle, but, I normally give the jar a good cleaning and drying and pour it back into the same one. To use: take a half teaspoon with 8 ounces of water, juice or tea.

How to Strain Loose Leaf Tea

I'm a pro at brewing tisane now, but in the beginning I caught all types of trouble trying to strain loose leaf tea. Since then, I've developed this simple method that'll leave you only with clean, drinkable tea. And you can use this method whether making one cup or one gallon. You'll need 3 or 4 tablespoons purified water - a fine mesh strainer - a measuring cup - a paper towel Directions: Dampen the paper towel with the purified water. Squeeze any excess water out and carefully open the paper towel. Line the fine mesh strainer with the damp towel. Prop that on the measuring cup. Pour the loose leaf tea (or extract) into the lined mesh strainer. Only the clean liquid will exit into the measuring cup. You can press the wet herb to squeeze out all the liquid, but I normally just let it drain until it's virtually dry.

Hops (humulus lupulus) is a truly magnificent herb that is part of the Cannabaceae family and known to treat allergies, anxiety, insomnia, restlessness, tension, indigestion, excitability, ADHD, nervousness, and irritability. Hops can also improve one's appetite, increase urine flow, and start the flow of breast milk. It is used as a bitter tonic and to help fight prostate cancer, breast cancer, ovarian cancer, high cholesterol, tuberculosis, bladder infections, intestinal cramps, and nerve pain. Hops causes severely realistic, lucid, vivid dreams.
